DARREN THOMAS

When I started my university career, there was a lot of fear from traditional families in my community that a western education would negatively change a person’s role and responsibility to their family and community. I had mixed feelings about going to university, because my community is important to me, but I felt it was important to have an education in this modern world. What became clear to me was that I wanted to play a role in improving health and well-being in my community. To hear more about Darren’s story: futurefurther.ca
